various areas – e.g. in oil and gas extraction – but is still in the early stages as a major technology to combat climate change.

DN whereas the costs and risks still outweigh the economic advantages, and the effectiveness of power stations using CCS is diminishing despite the use of the latest technology.

DO whereas the technology for CCS, as a bridging technology on the way to the decarbonisation of the energy system, may contribute to resolving the issue of reducing CO<sub>2</sub> emissions from power stations and could serve to complement renewable technologies, but whereas CCS is an end-of-pipe technology.

Intelligent computer systems and ICT

DP whereas the ICT sector currently produces 2% of global CO<sub>2</sub> emissions, but the industry is potentially capable not only of reducing its own CO<sub>2</sub> emissions but also, in particular, of developing innovative and more energy-efficient applications for the economy as a whole.

Financing and budgetary matters

DO whereas the current EU budget is insufficient to achieve the climate objectives, since the political priority of combating climate change has not yet been furnished with the necessary budgetary appropriations.

DR whereas in the forthcoming financial framework, budgetary appropriations must be allocated to combat climate change and create a European adaptation policy, in order to ensure that the EU has a sufficient "climate change budget" for the next budgetary period after 2013.

DS whereas combating climate change must be taken into account in all EU policies; whereas, consequently, the EU can no longer merely redistribute existing resources but should promote the creation of new resources to finance the cross-sectoral nature of the fight against climate change.

Education, training, reporting, labelling and awareness-raising

DT whereas economic and social policy measures to combat climate change herald a cultural transformation which will alter established habits and lifestyles, but whereas it will not be possible to achieve genuinely sustainable consumption and use of raw materials in all areas of society without a change of thinking and behaviour, for which new models of consumption and lifestyles must be developed.

DU whereas climate change will give a boost to technological modernisation, representing an economic opportunity which can only be exploited if there are enough qualified specialist workers on the labour market.

DV whereas the Eurobarometer Special Poll (Special Eurobarometer No 300) clearly shows that climate change is regarded as a very serious problem by a large majority of respondents in Europe, but whereas many complain of a lack of information and whereas
